2 Contribution to Research (n=260)

2.1 Contribution to research and discipline and environment (n=16)

2.1.1 Research Team Membership and Collaborations (n=4)

- (2009–2015). AUT Department of Psychotherapy & Counselling – I established the first research meetings in the Department, and have informally and, latterly, more formally, taken academic leadership in the Department. I co-authored the Department's research strategy (Fay & Tudor, 2014), and have encouraged all staff to research, write, and publish, and to enrol on doctoral programmes.
- (2004–2009). Temenos, Sheffield, UK – In the context of establishing the UK's first postgraduate training in person-centred psychotherapy and counselling (validated by Middlesex University), I designed, with David Shapiro (from the University of Sheffield), a 12 day research module (also the first of its kind in humanistic training courses in the UK), in which students produced research.
- (2003–2006). The PoNDER trial – I was invited to contribute to this randomised controlled trial, comparing cognitive behavioural and person-centred approaches of health visitors working with women with postnatal depression, by designing and delivering the person-centred training component, including offering follow-up supervision. I wrote two handbooks (Tudor, 2003, 2003; see also Tudor, 2010), and co-authored an article on the project (Morrell, Ricketts, Tudor, & Williams, 2010).
- (1981–1985). Upstairs Project (Hammersmith Crisis Centre Ltd), London, UK – I was appointed as a counsellor and research worker to a project that was concerned to research the efficacy of youth counselling. I contributed to the thinking about and design of the original research, protocols, and questionnaires, and wrote a paper on unemployment and mental health (Tudor, 1983).

2.12 Uptake and impact (beyond academia, in chronological order)

Regarding mental health and its promotion

I wrote the first book on the subject (Tudor, 1996), and have had a certain influence on the field, as evidenced by the following:

¹⁵These represent a 93.75% success (pass) rate.

- The book won that year's Bruce Burns Annual Mental Health Promotion Award.
- Bhugra (1998) summarised it as "a thought provoking, well written book in an area which needs novel ideas and the application of these ideas in relation to social policy and community mental health organisation" (p. 249); Thomlison (1999) described it as "an impressive book from many perspectives ... From a scholarly perspective, the book presents a coherent critique and integrative view of empirical and theoretical literature in mental health promotion." (p. 478) The holistic, multifaceted view of health outlined in the book was cited by the About NHS Evidence website, hosted by the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (2009).
- The conceptualisations set out in the book had a direct impact on the development of a national strategy in Aotearoa New Zealand, Building Strengths (Ministry of Health | Manatu Hauora, 2002), an influence which was acknowledged by Briggs (2001).
- The book has been cited in two publications on mental health and its promotion produced by the World Health Organisation (Herrman, Saxena, & Moodie, 2005; Friedli, 2009).
- The book has led to various invitations for me to speak at a number of international conferences, and to act as a consultant to two governments: Health Canada/Santé Canada in both Ottawa and Toronto; and the Scottish Government in Edinburgh, specifically regarding its National Programme for Improving Mental Health and Wellbeing (see www.wellscotland.info/mentalhealth/national-programme.html).
- In 1999, in recognition of my work in this field, I was made an Honorary Lecturer in the School of Health at Liverpool John Moores University.

- My development of the two continua concept (Minister of National Health & Welfare, 1988) has been influential in supporting the rationale for the development of mental health indicators for adults in Scotland (see Parkinson, 2007). Writing about the influence of my work and that of Keyes (2007) on the Scottish Government's National Programme, Smith-Berry (2008) commented that: "The work of both Tudor and Keyes brings with it a policy strategy for health promotion" (p. 7), and that:

This approach underpins all of the policy aims envisaged for the next stage of the National Programme. Through the introduction of this new language the Scottish Government aims to address the criticisms of both the 2004 and 2006–7 reviews that there was not a clear and well-understood definition of what constitutes positive mental health. (p. 7)

- The following year (2009) I was asked to comment on the mental emotional, physical and social well-being aspects of the Curriculum for Excellence being developed by Learning and Teaching Scotland. I have had a specific influence on the development of mental health promotion/improvement in Grampian:
 - In 1998 I developed contacts with both universities in Aberdeen and in 1999 wrote two distance learning papers on mental health for the Faculty of Nursing, Midwifery and Community Studies, University of Aberdeen (Tudor, 1999b, 1999d).
 - For some five years, between 2000 and 2004, I had a contract with Health Promotions, Aberdeen to deliver training courses for a variety of public sector workers on the subject of mental health and its promotion, in the course of which I trained and influenced nearly 500 people. One of the people who commissioned these courses, now a Development Officer for Mental Health and Emotional Wellbeing at Learning and Teaching Scotland, recalled participants' responses to the training (S. Leslie, personal [e-mail] communication, 3rd February, 2009): "The evaluations were all very positive with staff finding the training very helpful in terms of aiding their understanding of mental health and implications for themselves as well as their work with children and young people."
 - In 2005 I was involved in drafting Grampian's regional policy on mental health improvement (Tudor & Begbie, 2005).
- Elsewhere in the UK, others have used the book as the basis of training on mental health and its promotion; as Thomlison (1999) acknowledged: "The book serves as an impressive reference for those teaching in the field of mental health." (p. 478)
- In 2002 Ian Norman and Iain Ryrie approached me to contribute a chapter to their extensive textbook on mental health nursing (Tudor, 2003).

Regarding the registration of psychotherapists and the regulation of psychotherapy

My work in this area (Tudor, 1999a, 1999b, 2010; 2011a, 2011b, 2011c, 2011d, 2012a, 2012b; 2013; 2014; 2015; Bailey & Tudor, 2011; Tudor & Duncan, 2012; Fay & Tudor, 2015; Smith & Tudor, 2015; Tudor & Fay, 2015; Cowan, Hennessy, MacEwan, Tudor, Warriner, & Wood, 2016; Tudor & Shaw, 2016) has led:

- To an invitation to write a discussant article (Tudor, 2011).
- To contribute an article to the New Zealand Journal of Counselling (Tudor, 2013) which has had an effect on the debate, as evidenced by the following personal communication (e-mail correspondence, 26th September, 2014) from Alistair Crocket, a prominent member of the NZAC and generally a proponent of the registration of counsellors:

Your article certainly challenged my thinking and I wrote an article in the following issue in part in response to the challenges you offered to ideas about registration [Crocket, 2014]. Before our latest [NZAC] National Executive meeting I asked that the members read your article and mine in relation to a paper on regulation that Robyn McGill & I presented. The work that I had to do to prepare for the article I wrote led me to conclude that HPCA Act regulation is probably not possible now because of the changes to the risk criteria introduced in 2010. So in that sense your article was very influential on the development of my thinking and understanding about professional regulation. That the panel that Grant [Dillon, the Past President of the NZAP] contributed to was planned and executed with 3 non-NZAC members presenting was also influenced by that stream of questioning regulation to which your article contributed.

Regarding critical thinking

My critical thinking and work has led me to being invited:

- To contribute a chapter to a critical view of contemporary psychiatry (Sanders & Tudor, 2001).
- To present a critical perspective on Western psychotherapy as part of a poutama series (Tudor, 2013).
- To write a critical commentary on "the relational turn" in psychotherapy (Tudor, 2014).
- To deliver a keynote speech on the concept of "the critical Adult" (Tudor, 2015).
- To write a chapter on person-centred psychology as a critical psychology (Tudor, 2015).
- To be a Fellow of The Critical Institute (2015).
